LADWP Stormwater Capture Master Plan

Years ago, local experts devised a vast system to move rain water as quickly as possible through Los Angeles and out to sea via storm drains. With the climate change reducing L.A.'s sources of imported water, LADWP is embarking on a program to greatly expand the amount of run-off it collects and percolates into local aquifers for later use. Come hear about the plan, its specific projects and how the city will benefit.

DTLA Bike Share Plan Update

A bike share system made up of self-service kiosks throughout Downtown where individuals can rent and return a bicycle anywhere within a network of stations is one more reason to embrace active transportation. Stations will be located in close proximity for quick trips where users live, work and visit, with an emphasis on transit stops. Many Downtown residents and businesses have been clamoring for this program and LADOT, along with Metro, are planning to launch it early next year. Get an update on the program, its launch date and how it will work.

Transportation
